We look forward to welcoming our friends from the other FOGSI societies of West Bengal along with a host of National Faculty on the occasion. The scientific and workshop committees have already got their act going and promise to put up a commendable academic show. The topics will be of practical importance and leave the delegates with wisdom pearls useful in their clinical practice.

Tamluk: A journey Through Time & Heritage

Tamluk, a city in West Bengal, is a blend of ancient history and modern simplicity. Once known as Tamralipta, it was an important port during the Maurya and Gupta empires, with remnants of its maritime past still present in the area. The city thrives on its rich cultural heritage, evident in its festivals, folk music, and Bengali architecture. Despite the advancements in infrastructure, Tamluk retains a sense of calm, with its rural landscapes offering a peaceful contrast to urban life. Today, it balances tradition with progress, making it a unique example of how history and modernity coexist.

Matangini Hazra: The Silent Warrior Of Bengal Independence

Matangini Hazra, a revered figure in Indian history, was a brave freedom fighter from the Tamluk region in West Bengal. Born in 1870, she became a symbol of courage during the Indian struggle for independence. Her most notable act of defiance came in 1942, during the Quit India Movement, when she led a procession of villagers in Tamluk to protest against British rule.

Despite being over 70 years old at the time, Matangini Hazra carried the Indian tricolor and marched to the Tamluk police station, where she was confronted by British officers. When asked to stop, she continued her march, undeterred by the gunfire that followed. She was eventually shot and martyred, making her a symbol of resilience and patriotism.

Her sacrifice is remembered in Tamluk and beyond, and she is often referred to as the "Lady of Tamluk." Matangini Hazra's courage and unwavering commitment to India's independence continue to inspire generations of Indians in their fight for justice and freedom.
